Amman Stock Exchange Holds a Virtual Lecture for Students of Palestine Ahliya University

November 11, 2026

As part of its ongoing efforts to promote awareness and exchange expertise with academic institutions, the Amman Stock Exchange (ASE) delivered a virtual lecture to students of Palestine Ahliya University via Zoom, entitled “The Impact of Events in the Middle East on Financial Markets, Particularly Arab Markets.” The lecture was attended by a number of university students and faculty members.

The CEO of the ASE Mazen Wathaifi, reviewed the impact of regional developments and events on the performance of Arab financial markets. He discussed key economic and geopolitical factors influencing market movements, the challenges faced, and future prospects for development in light of the rapid changes occurring in the region. Furthermore, he highlighted the positive performance of the ASE over the past two years evidenced by the rise in its main indices despite the difficult conditions and challenges affecting both the region and the world. He also outlined the measures taken by the ASE, in collaboration with other Jordanian capital market institutions, to enhance the market’s competitiveness, improve its investment environment, and increase its appeal to both domestic and foreign investors.

This lecture is part of a series of efforts and initiatives undertaken by the ASE to promote investment awareness and financial literacy among young people, and to familiarize students with the mechanisms of capital markets and the institutions operating within them. These initiatives aim to enhance students’ financial and investment knowledge and help them understand the nature of financial markets and their role in stimulating economic activity and providing sources of financing.
